Where PAs Come for Opportunity

250 PAs from Washington and the surrounding region will be at the WAPA Fall Conference looking to be introduced to innovative products and new technologies — Will you be there too?

A Physician Assistant (PA) practices medicine under the direction of a physician. As members of healthcare teams, PAs:

- take medical histories,
- diagnose and treat patients,
- consult and refer to specialists,
- prescribe medications,
- assist in surgery,
- counsel patients and
- perform minor procedures.

A PA exercises considerable autonomy in diagnosing and treating patients, but the supervising physician and state law determine the scope of a PA's practice. PAs practice in a wide variety of specialties and settings.

Today, PAs are one of the fastest-growing occupations on the front lines of healthcare.[†]

- Every year, a typical PA treats 3,500 patients[†]
- The profession has grown 34% since 2006[†] and is expected to continue growing
- Nearly one-third (32%) of PAs practice in primary care[†], the largest segment of which is family medicine (23% of PAs overall)

Since being involved with the WAPA, I feel it has been beneficial for the children and families across the region. I have been able to connect with providers on a level that is truly amazing; providing resources and tools to ensure seamless accessibility to care at Shriners Hospitals for Children. Thank you WAPA and your commitment to patients across the region.

PAs are a key target group for Boehringer-Ingelheim. This is my fifth year as an exhibitor as the traffic to our booth is always great. I get to see students, recent grads, and PAs from all specialties.

The Fall WAPA Conference was truly a pleasurable and effective event. The constant interaction with the Physician Assistants — the medical providers on the frontline of patient care — was informative, beneficial, and helped strengthen current relationships and created a plethora of new contacts. It was a true honor to be involved in such a well run organization and event!

Throughout the years, the efforts of many PAs have resulted in Washington State having one of the best Physician Assistant practice laws in the nation. Our aim is to increase the membership in our organization so that we continue to represent all PAs working in our state.

WAPA works to ensure the professional growth and recognition of PAs in the healthcare team and promote excellence of patient-centered care in Washington State.
